WATER WORKS

Court Practically Says the Injunction Petition

AGAINST PUBLIC BOND SALE

Was Frivolous and Unjustifiable--Solicitor Will Try to Hurry the Second Case.

Judge Seward on Monday morning decided the case of The City of Newark, by Philip B. Smythe, city solicitor, vs. The City of Newark, Andrew J. Crilly, mayor, Frank T. Maurath, auditor, the Finance Committee of the Council of the city, William E. Miller, chairman, Joseph Moser and Rees R. Jones, being the injunction suit to restrain the sale of the water works bonds.

The suit was brought upon a request, in writing, made by Charles Vadakin, upon Mr. Smythe, as solicitor. Smythe, in pursuance of the request brought the suit. The petition alleged that the notice of sale was defective in some of the late publications, section 692 of the Revised Statutes being referred to in the notice of the sale, whereas it should have been 1692, the digit "1" having dropped out of the type.

It was also claimed that the notice would not have been published for 30 days before the 15th of December, as required by law, and claiming that, therefore, defendants were without legal authority to sell the bonds. Upon the filing of the petition, a preliminary injunction was issued, as is customary in injunction suits where the petition, on its face, makes out a prima facie case.

The court held that all that the statute required to be set forth in the notice was the nature, amount, rate of interest and length of time the bonds have to run, with time and place of sale. This the notice does; and the omission of the digit "1" is immaterial, the allegation in the notice of the number of the section of the revised statutes being surplussage.

The court held that the first day of publication in the paper should be included; that the publication on its face shows that the 30 days' notice was given before the day of sale; that the typographical error is entirely immaterial; that the petition did not warrant the relief prayed for, viz: an injunction, and the court sustained the demurrer to the petition.

City Solicitor Smythe and his associates are much gratified by the decision of the court in as much as it has a direct bearing upon the legality of the recent sale of $300,000 worth of water works bonds at private sale.

When Mr. Smythe asked for the temporary injunction he told Judge Coyner in presenting the petition that he did so at the request of a tax payer and that he did not think the facts set forth in the application constituted a sufficient cause of action. The temporary injunction was granted and the public sale of the bonds was stopped. The lawyers made an entry on the court record but this was afterward stricken off. Now Judge Seward has ordered an entry of the same character placed on record.

Speaking of the decision at noon Monday the city solicitor said that while this decision does not cover the entire controversy it does so far as it goes, vindicate the city officials in their action. In other words the contention of the solicitor so far as the first injunction goes was valid.

City Solicitor Smythe informed the Advocate Monday that he would force the other injunction case, against the private sale of the bonds, to a hearing as soon as possible.

The city Board of Public Service has advertised for bids for the construction of a new water works system. The notice to contractors provides that the bids be received on Saturday, January 21. It is to be hoped that the other injunction case which is against the legality of the private sale of the bonds will be heard and determined before that time.

PRESIDENT

Makes a Statement of the Purpose of Conference Held at the White House.

Washington, Jan 9.—An indecisive victory for tariff revision, which was practically the only question seriously discussed, was the outcome of the three-hour conference at the White House Saturday afternoon between the leaders in Congress. The President is said to have played the unusual role of a listener throughout the discussion, contenting himself at the outset with stating the object he had in mind in asking the senators and members to meet him and then allowing the latter to give their views fully and freely.

The senators present were Allison, Aldrich Platt of Connecticut, and Spooner, and the members of the house were Speaker Cannon, Payne, Dalzel, Grosvenor and Tawney, Minnesota.

While it was said in a brief statement given out at the White House after the conference that the tariff and other subjects were talked of, the fact seems to be that the tariff practically monopolized attention, although some references were made to legislation for the regulation of railroad rates and the placing of interstate corporations under Federal charters. At the conclusion of the conference the President authorized the following statement concerning it.

"Those gentlemen came here to discuss various matters of policy before congress, including the tariff and the interstate commerce law, but they are not ready yet to announce any definite conclusions."

The President would go no further than that, but he emphasized the point that no definite conclusions had been reached.

ADAMS ELECTED

Peabody Will File Contest in Colorado

ADAMS EXPECTS SUCH A MOVE

Fight Expected When Nominations for Supreme Judges Come Up in Legislature.

Denver, Col., Jan. 9.—(Bulletin)—Governor Peabody announced today he will file contest papers tomorrow after McDonald, the Republican lieutenant-governor-elect is sworn in. McDonald is expected to appoint an investigating committee favorable to Peabody.

Denver, Col., Jan. 9.—Alva Adams was on Saturday night declared by the legislature to be duly elected governor of Colorado. The returns showed Adams 123,078; Peabody 113,304. Plurality for Adams 9,774.

A cheer greeted the announcement of the result of the citizens when made by Lieut-Gov. Haggott.

The Republican candidates to all other state officers were declared elected. Under the terms of the agreement reached Saturday afternoon by the various factions in the legislature, no notice of contest will be filed by Gov. Peabody until after the inauguration of Mr. Adams, which is set for 10 o'clock Tuesday morning.

Denver, Colo., Jan. 9. — It is reliably stated it is Governor Peabody's intention to contest the election of Governor-elect Adams. He has several days in which to file his notice of contest, and he may not do so until after the inauguration of Governor-elect Adams. The latter said: "I do not know whether Governor Peabody will make a contest or not, but I expect that he will. I am in a much better position for such a proceeding now than I was two days ago. At that time the investigation was confined by the court to the city and county of Denver. Now it includes the whole state, and I feel confident that the Democrats can show as many or more fraudulent Republican votes in the outlying counties as the Republicans claim were cast by the Democrats in Denver. I am certain of the result if the entire state is brought into the contest, as it must be if Governor Peabody decides on such a course."

A warm fight is expected when the nominations for judges of the supreme court made by Governor Peabody come up for confirmation. The Democrats held a caucus and at its close declared that they would fight the nominations to the supreme bench of Bailey and Goddard with all their power. They claim, moreover, that with the Republican senators, Campbell and Delong, voting with them, they will be able to prevent the confirmation. The Republican leaders declared that they have received personal pledges from enough Republican senators to insure the confirmation of the two men.

PROSECUTOR J. R. FITZIGBBON

Will Decide Which Case Will First be Tried--Judge Coyner Will Preside.

Mt. Vernon, O., Jan. 9.—The trial of James F. Lingafelter, cashier of the defunct Newark Savings bank, and his son, Robert, on the charge of forgery, was this morning set for Tuesday, February 7. It is expected that the trials will occupy the entire week.

Prosecutor L. C Stillwell presented the case to Judge George Coyner this morning upon his arrival from Delaware and February 7 was the date assigned for the beginning of the celebrated cases. Which will be tried first will be left to Prosecutor J. R. Fitzgibbon of Newark.

Judge Coyner, who has been sick with erysipelas at his home in Delaware for several days, arrived today to remain all week. The damage suit of Borden vs. Coe was adjourned today until tomorrow, owing to the illness of the defendant, Captain Coe of Centerburg. Captain Coe is ill with rheumatism.

A fire started in the business district here Saturday night and for a time it looked like a serious loss would result. The blaze started in the Davis block on West Vine street, but the loss will not be more than $1200 to $1500.

BRITISH SHIP

Arrives at New York After an Eventful Voyage—Cargo on Fire and Crew Sick.

New York, Jan. 9. — The British steamer Zambesi, from Savannah for Bremen with a cargo of cotton and phosphate, put into this port after a most eventful voyage, with her cargo of cotton on fire and several of her crew sick. Captain Rooney of the Zambesi reports that he sailed from Savannah on New Year's day. The vessel experienced very severe weather. All went well, however, until Jan. 5, when the steamer struck a submerged wreck, which broke the stem and stove in several of the bow plates under water, causing the forepeak to fill with water. The ship was immediately headed for this port, nearly 500 miles distant. Heavy weather prevailed and furious seas flooded the forward decks. On Jan. 6 volumes of smoke were seen pouring from the forehatch, and it was evident the cotton in the hold was on fire. The ship's hose was quickly connected and the fire was soon under control.

BEEF TRUST CASE

Washington, Jan. 9.—In the Beef Trust case before the Supreme court this afternoon Attorney General Moody argued that the packers had agreed to refrain from bidding against each other in the purchase of live stock and combined and conspired arbitrarily to raise, lower and fix the prices of fresh meat and to keep them uniform as among themselves. He said this conspiracy was rendered effective by periodical secret meetings throughout the country by agents and attorneys of the defendants. He maintained that such agreements relate to and restrain commerce. He claimed also that the defendants obtained unlawful rebates.

Russians Reach Nagasaki from Port Arthur

DURING THE RECENT SIEGE

It is Said Russians Lost 25,000 Men --After the Baltic Fleet--Day's War News.

Nagasaki, Jan. 9.—A thousand wounded Russians arrived from Port Arthur today, and were taken to the hospitals.

Cost to the Russians.

Tokyo, Jan. 9.—While nothing official is yet obtained as to the number of Russians that paid the price of the defense of Port Arthur, it is estimated today that fully 25,000 were killed or wounded during the siege.

After Russian Fleet.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 9.—Grave fears were created in official circles today by the rumor that a strong Japanese squadron is en route at all possible speed for Madagascar to meet Admiral Rojestvansky and take advantage of the Baltic vessels while undergoing repairs there.

WILL GO TO JAPAN

Gens. Smirnoff and Gosk Prisoners of War—They Decline to Accept Parole From Japs.

Tokyo, Jan. 9.—Generals Fock and Smirnoff have decided to go to Japan as prisoners of war. General Smirnoff was in command of the forts at Port Arthur and General Fock commanded the Fourth division of the army there. General Fock says he will drill his men in Japan. Fifty per cent of the Russian officers will go to Japan and share with their men the fate of prisoners of war. There are five Russian admirals at Port Arthur, one of whom will go to Japan. Among the admirals is a prince. Twelve foreign naval attaches have visited Port Arthur and inspected the remains of the Russian fleet.

The transfer of prisoners at Port Arthur has been completed. The total number of officers transferred was 878, men 23,491.

The Japanese intend to establish a naval station at Port Arthur. Vice Admiral Y. Shibayama will probably be placed in charge of it. The military administration at Port Arthur will retain only a small garrison as soon as the prisoners are withdrawn and order is restored. The fleet is busily engaged in clearing mines, but owing to their great number navigation will be unsafe for a long time. Only government craft will be allowed to enter the harbor. It is probable that Dalny will soon be opened up to neutrals. Japanese companies are preparing to establish weekly services at that port.

WILL CONTINUE WAR

Nevertheless Peace Talk Is Heard In Many Quarters In St. Petersburg —Conference Still On.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 9.—The conferences which Emperor Nicholas has been holding with members of the council of the empire, M. Witte and other ministers and advisers on the international and external situation have not yet been concluded, but nothing has occurred which would indicate that the government is prepared to depart from its present program of continuing the war to the bitter end. Nevertheless talk of peace has been heard in many quarters, the foundation for it being ascribed to Foreign Minister Lamsdorff's alleged position in favor of such a course on the ground that aside from the humiliation to military prestige involved, it would only mean the relinquishment of Manchuria to which Russia already is formally pledged.

Japanese Legation Advised.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The Japanese legation received the following cablegram from the foreign office at Tokyo: "General [illegible] reports arrival of Russians [illegible] under escort [illegible] The total of the prisoners [illegible] 878 officers and 23,491 men. [illegible] of 441 officers and 229 orderlies [illegible] parole so far General Smirnoff, General Fock, General Gorbatovsky and Admiral Wiltmann preferring to be sent to Japan as prisoners, while Stoessel will leave Dalny for home on the 12th of January."

What Map Revealed.

Tokyo, Jan. 9.—The map of Port Arthur which the Russians produced on Dec. 18 in support of their complaint that the Japanese fire was damaging hospitals shows 17 hospitals scattered throughout the old and new towns. To avoid hitting these the Japanese batteries would have had to refrain from firing altogether in the direction of both towns.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 9.— General Kuropatkin reports the frustration of a Japanese attempt to surprise his center front the night of Jan. 6, and the bayonetting of 21 Japanese the night of Jan 3 by a cavalry reconnaissance in the valley of the Taitze river, in the direction of Sianchan.

LAKE TO RIVER

Deep Waterway in Ohio May Be a Reality

STEP IS TAKEN BY OFFICIALS

Gov. Herrick to Approve Contracts for Increased Rental for Use of Water.

Columbus, O., Jan. 9.—Governor Herrick will approve the contracts for increased rentals for use of water by manufacturers on the northern division of the Ohio canal. This is held to be a step toward the creation of a deep water link between Lake Erie and the Ohio river.

The board of public works, in session here, will hear the report of Chief Engineer Charles Perkins. It is believed that the final details of the project to raise rentals to $30,000,000 annually have been completed. Colonel Perkins is expected to report complete plans for the improvement. This will enable the board to let contracts for the work at once. The contracts must be let before Feb. 15, otherwise on that date the first appropriation of $75,000 would lapse back into the state treasury. For the current year there is also available the second appropriation of $125,000. These amounts will not be sufficient to provide a seven-foot canal from Cleveland to Dresden, where the Muskingum river is to be tapped, but it will carry the improvement so far that the legislature will not think of abandoning it, but will care for it until finished. Inland navigation from Lake Erie to New Orleans via Cleveland and Marietta is in sight.

JOSEPH W. FOLK

Inaugurated Governor of Missouri Monday

HE MADE A GREAT SPEECH

Deenan Installed in Illinois--Smoot Faction in Control in Utah-- Political News.

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 9.—Joseph W. Folk, St. Louis' famous "boodle" crusader and the only Democrat to survive the Republican landslide last November in this state, was installed in the executive chair at noon today. Although he has insisted that his inauguration be simple, it proved to be the most brilliant for many years. Thousands of friends and admirers of the new governor flocked here to witness the ceremonies. Scarcely a county in the state was unrepresented by a special delegation. St. Louis, Kansas City and others of the larger cities contributed hundreds to the throng. Over half of the immense crowds are Republicans who came to witness the installation of Lieutenant Governor McKinley and the other Republican state officers.

JOSEPH W. FOLK.

The ceremonies were held in the house of representatives, which was handsomely decorated, as was the executive mansion where the governor's reception will be held tonight.

Retiring Governor Dockery formally surrendered the mansion to its new master and mistress at 8 o'clock this morning. The occasion was celebrated by an informal breakfast. Among those in attendance were Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bryan, Warden and Mrs. Woolridge of the penitentiary, a few Democratic senators and representatives and most of the retiring state officers.

In his address Governor Folk said: "The legislator's lot is not easy. The pittance he receives for his work is hardly sufficient to supply the necessary wants. Temptations on every hand assume the most insidious forms. An innocent present given in supposed friendship may have concealed in it the germ that will lead to the downfall of legislative honor.

"I promised the people of the state to do my best to put a stop to bribery and that promise is going to be kept to the letter. The best way to keep corruption from legislative halls is by the aggressive honesty of the legislators. If there be found any of the venal nature they should be expelled from the assembly as moral lepers. A corrupt man has no politics and uses a party name only to serve his own ends. To take away the incentive for bribery as far as possible all franchises rights and privileges secured by bribery should be declared null and void. The Collision on the D. F. and J.

By Howard Fielding

Copyright, 1905, by C. W. Hooke

AN absurd old college song begins with these words:

The prettiest girl that ever I saw
Was sucking cider through a straw.

I hadn't thought of it in many years, but it suddenly flashed through my mind as I gazed upon the girl and the straw. Nobody drinks cider in these days. Upon the occasion in question the beverage was even less strenuous than the apple juice of our forefathers. It was a preparation which they serve at the Continental club under the name of a "mild cooler." As to the girl, she was undoubtedly the one referred to in the song, whenever and wherever it may be sung—the prettiest girl that anybody ever saw. Her name was Muriel Palm.

Miss Palm removed the straw from her lips, and I thought of the rest of the song, which every one knows. But my acquaintance with the young lady was not close enough to permit of my entertaining any idea in regard to her lips except that they were pretty to look at. Besides, the ladies' dining room at the Continental club is a prim sort of place, and there were fifty people present at the time.

"There's been a dreadful railroad accident," said Miss Palm. "Did you read about it?"

"No," said I. "Where?"

"Out west: a long way off," she replied, and then, with a sad little shake of the head that made a golden ringlet just above her left ear shimmer like a fairy's jewels, "But I shall think of it tonight."

"Why should you burden your young mind with such an unpleasant matter?" I inquired.

"Because I shall be riding on a railroad train tonight," she replied. "I'm going home—all alone too."

Now, here was a real calamity, close at hand, startling and personal. I looked at Miss Palm and I sighed. It was a genuine, unpremeditated expression of deep feeling, and she seemed to appreciate it.

"I thought you were to make a longer visit," said I weakly.

"Goodness!" she exclaimed. "I've been here more than a month. Did you fancy that my uncle had adopted me?"

"But I've known you only two weeks," said I, more boldly.

Miss Palm seemed to take that matter under consideration. She slowly and daintily stirred the "mild cooler" with the straw, and her head was bent forward so that I could not see her eyes, but only the long lashes which looked so dark against the perfect clearness of her skin. I am so constituted as to be especially susceptible to the influence of blue eyes with dark brows and lashes. And with a sudden illumination I perceived that I was so constituted as to be especially susceptible to the influence of this particular girl. She was like the breath of unseen blossoms and like the tints in clear water at the beginning of the dawn. Such loveliness has the fragility of the moments which are shattered by every silent stroke of time.

And with this thought a chill of superstitious terror descended upon me. I seemed to see the rush of great engines through the night and to hear the clang of iron and to feel the willfulness and cruelty of the force to whose blind and headlong haste this priceless and most delicate fabric was to be intrusted.

"I wish you weren't going," said I, without meaning to speak at all.

"That's very kind of you," said she. "Upon some accounts I wish so too, but I must be home for my cousin's wedding."

"Your cousin's!" I exclaimed. "Not Pat's?"

"Oh, dear no, Pat's not ready to be married yet."

"Well, I hope he never will be," said I.

Miss Palm had talked to me a great deal about Pat, who was a ninety-ninth cousin, to the best of my comprehension, and a natural object of suspicion.

"What's poor Pat done to you?" she inquired, with the light of mischief in her eyes. "You don't even know him."

"No," I admitted, "but you speak of him continually, so that I almost feel as if"—

"Well?"

"He is no friend of mine," said I. "I'm agin him."

"I'm sure I never said any but nice things of Pat," said she. "If you hate him, it is upon your own responsibility."

"I accept it," said I, "but when do you go?"

"At 7 o'clock, I believe," she replied. "Uncle is attending to time tables, tickets and things."

"And of course he'll put you aboard the train? There's nothing in the world that I can do?"

"No, I thank you," said she. "It's enough that you should bring me here to this very nice place for luncheon. Wasn't it queer that we should happen to meet upon the street? And otherwise I might not have seen you to say goodby."

"You haven't eaten a blessed thing," said I.

She looked surprised. "Haven't I?" she asked.

Obviously no answer was expected, and so I devoted a few seconds to thinking of her uncle. If he was to take her to the train, it was no use going down. Miss Palm's uncle was equal to a company of United States infantry with fixed bayonets and orders to shoot to kill. It would be better to say goodby anywhere else than in his presence.

"It is quite a journey to make alone," said I. "Do you go by the D. F. and J.?"

"Yes," said she. "I'll be home early in the morning."

Again I was conscious of that ridiculous alarm; again I followed with my mind's eye the iron monster raging through the dark.

"Really," I stammered, "this miserable accident that you were telling me of - Do you know, I'm afraid I'm going to be anxious about you?"

"What nonsense," she cried. "And besides, what can I do? I can't live here always?"

"Even that might be arranged," said I. "And yet I suppose you must go, but I'd like to hear of your safe arrival."

Her eyes twinkled, shaking the heart in my breast with the magic of their light.

"I shall telegraph my uncle," said she.

"Confound—I beg your pardon. Telegraphing him won't do me any good." She studied me a little, with her head inclined to the right, and then to the left, after the manner of a bird. Looking into her eyes I saw the gleam of a gentle fancy that dawned in her brain. She took a dear little memorandum book out of a bag that hung at her belt.

"I haven't your address," said she. "And, besides, it would be silly to telegraph to you if I am safe. But if there should be a wreck, and I should be killed or very badly hurt"—

"Don't! Don't!"

"Why, you'd like to know of it," she continued. "So I'll just put down your name right here on the front page"—she turned the book over and opened it—"and I'll write the one word 'notify' over it. Would you like that?"

Like it, indeed! Could any man be so dull as not to feel the joy and the honor of it? It was as if we had made some vow together. That message would never be sent. I would trust the angels to guard against such a need. But there would always be a thread, delicate as a strand of her shining hair, extending from that dear little book to my heart. So long as she preserved the book we could never be wholly apart; all the vast fabric of human communication would be bewitched to serve as the waiting slave of our friendship, and I might always feel that I stood ready for her service.

"I should never have dared ask so much," said I. "How long may I hope that you will keep the book?"

She was writing my name with dainty precision.

"Oh, I'll keep it a long time," she said. "I have important accounts in it. You mustn't peep at them; they are dreadful extravagances. Now write the address under the name."

I wrote it, and she put the book back into the bag.

"I'm afraid you'll forget all about the name and the man," said I, "but

"I'll keep it a long time."

at any rate, I'm now a knight sworn to your loyal service. Some day, perhaps— But why dream? You will never need me."

"One never knows when one may need a friend," she replied. "My cousin Pat says"—

"Hang Pat!" I exclaimed. "Do you really care for him?"

"Cousin Pat?" She laughed with huge enjoyment. "What a joke! I should pity a girl who cared for Pat. He's a sad flirt. His heart, as Longfellow expresses it, 'is like a scene in an old play. The curtain rises to slow music, and lo, enter the eleven thousand virgins of Cologne.' I despise flirts."

We have a large clock on the mantel in that dining room, and I think it is a mistake. It struck with a loud and painful sound just as I opened my mouth to say something really serious.

"So late!" she cried. "And my trunks are not ready. I must hurry home."

I could not detain her. We walked along some blocks of city streets together, and I felt like a boy chasing a butterfly. Physically, she walked along soberly and demurely enough, but her soul which I fancied myself desirous of addressing seemed merely fluttering in the sun, here there and everywhere, daintily elusive. We said goodby at last before her uncle's door, and I had gained absolutely no ground since the lodgment of my name in the fine green covered book. True, at the last moment she returned the pressure of my hand heartily enough and looked me in the eyes, yet somehow I felt that I might never see her again.

I spent that evening in the billiard room of the Continental club, and made many dreary attempts to cheer myself up. It was after midnight when I reached my rooms, and I had planned to sit up for an hour or so before a bit of sea-coal fire, for the autumn night had turned chilly.

I had taken three or four letters out of my box below stairs, absentmindedly, without even looking at the script of the addresses; but as I flung them upon a table something yellow fluttered out from between them. I stared at it; but why should I be alarmed? I receive many telegrams; there was no reason to suppose that this one bore any evil tidings. Yet as I paused I heard a boy crying a late extra on the street, and his studiously unintelligible jargon sounded like— The sweat broke out suddenly upon my forehead and instantly the telegram was open in my hands:

Miss Palm injured in collision here. We hope not seriously.

DR. S. K. ADAMS.

Dazed, I glanced up at the date line. The letters danced and blurred so that it was ten seconds at least before I read the word. The message had been sent from Conway, a little town in the northern part of the state. Being familiar with the route of the D. F. and J. road I knew that the train which Miss Palm had taken could not have reached Conway before twelve o'clock. Dr. Adams had been prompt with his message, and the transmission had been unusually rapid. Probably the accident had happened while I was saying good night to some fellows at the club, joking and laughing with them. Blessed heaven, and my love in peril and pain! With what ghastly cruelty nature plots behind our backs.

It was no time for pouring vain accusations into the deaf ears of the Fates. The need was for action. First, money. One must count cash in these days before he encourages any altruistic impulse. If you stretch out your hand to save your own father from drowning in God's ocean some mercenary rascal will find means to take toll of you. However, I was fairly well supplied; a matter of a hundred dollars and a check book ought to see me through. Second, transportation. There used to be a train northward at 2 o'clock on the D. F. and J. Third, since I had time for the subject, clothes. It would be unpleasant to go to Conway in evening dress. But in the meanwhile a telegram. I rang for a boy and sat down to write.

At such a time the familiar acts of life oppress us strangely. They seem to pass like little people bearing great burdens. We watch them and groan with their toil. The drawing up of my chair, the finding of the telegraph blank (though it lay ready to my hand), the lifting of the pen and, above all, the choice of words with which to frame my message—all these took shape as individual tasks of difficulty and labored heavily for their own accomplishment. My effort seemed to be to let them go on in their orderly way and not to break in upon them at the thrust of sudden and unreasonable impulse. I wrote this:

Coming on 2 o'clock train. Please give Miss Palm all possible attention. Expense must not be considered. Secure best medical and surgical assistance. Wire me at Annandale.

That was the nearest point I dared to name, though it was over thirty miles away, for I feared every sort of delay in the forwarding of my message. The train, as I happened to know, had carried a great number of people from our city, and doubtless the wires would be crowded with messages such as I had received and such as I would send.

The telegraph boy came while I was dressing with half crazed haste. He began to read my message and to count the words, stumbling over them and producing in my mind a singular effect of horror. It seems to me that I never heard such frightful words as "medical and surgical assistance" in this boy's high, harsh and halting voice. I paid him for the message and pushed him out of the room.

I told my cabman to drive fast to the station, thus securing a long half hour there in which to do nothing at all. Few people were in the waiting room and nobody at all upon the platform when I began to pace up and down through the chill air and the acrid smoke of engines. It was probable that many people had been notified of the disaster, but that my summons had been the most prompt. I blessed Muriel's little book. It was good to have something to be glad of in this black interval of waiting.

Presently a tall and soldierly figure, muffled in a coat of military cut, strode out upon the platform, and I recognized Colonel Harold Burbank, who led a regiment before he was twenty years old, in 1865, and doesn't look fifty today. I always liked him; I admired his poise and the strength of his calm countenance as he came toward me under the electric lamps. I was conscious of a feeling of security, as if I were under good leadership, when he told me gravely that he was going to Conway, and that he had friends on the wrecked train.

"Mrs. Singer, the widow of Captain Singer, was aboard," said he. "I have not yet heard whether she is injured. I trust not."

I thought it fine of him to go upon a chance of helping the widow of his comrade, and I wondered whether there could be an old romance in this. He might have loved her long ago, I thought. He had never married, but had always lived alone in bachelor quarters.

While I was speculating upon the possibilities of the situation some one spoke my name, and I turned to see George Brookfield with a slender, fierce looking little man who was a stranger to me. Brookfield wore an opera cloak over a dress suit, but he had a rough gray golf cap on his head, and the combination, even at such a moment, moved me to smile.

"I hadn't time to dress," said Brookfield. "There's a wreck up at Conway, and I have friends on the train. I got a telegram. Have you met Dr. Deering?"

I shook hands with the fierce little man, whose eyes seemed to trepan my frontal bone when he looked at me. Meanwhile Brookfield drew his cloak about him and shivered nervously.

"I went for Dr. Deering at once," said he, with the air of one who presents his case before an invisible jury. "Dr. Deering is the best surgeon we have, as you know. What more could I do?"

He glanced from Colonel Burbank to me. Neither of us replied. For my own part, I was bitterly accusing myself. It seemed hardly credible that Brookfield, a mere youth, a leader of cotillons, should have taken this wise precaution which I had never thought of. True, Brookfield is very rich and might naturally think of something expensive in a moment of emergency, and Deering was beyond doubt the most expensive possibility which our city afforded.

The same thought must have come to Colonel Burbank, for he presently drew me aside and suggested that we should make an arrangement in regard to Dr. Deering. It is a soldier's trade to take what he finds ready to his hand. I told the colonel that I would share any expense, and he replied that the main thing was to get the man; we could decide about paying for him later.

At this moment a stout young man came panting through the gate and looked wildly around for the train, which had not yet been backed in.

"Billy!" he cried, catching sight of me. "Isn't this dreadful?"

"The accident?"

"Yes," he answered. "Did you know Miss Palm was on the train?"

"She told me she was going at 7 o'clock," said I.

"That's the train," said he. "Terrible, terrible!"

"How did you learn about it?" I asked. "Was it in the extra?"

"The extra is on the prize fight," he replied, "but they got in one line of red type just to say that the train was in collision with a freight at Conway and that it was rumored that there was loss of life. Billy, you don't suppose"—

He paused, looking up into my face. The perspiration was dripping from his forehead, but he trembled with the cold. He wore a rather thin suit for the time of year and had no overcoat.

"No," said I; "I don't believe Miss Palm is very badly hurt. You seem to take it pretty hard."

"Billy," said he fervently, "there's only just her in all this world. I ought not to speak like that, and I wouldn't to anybody else except you. She can never be anything to me."

I was sorry for little Jack Manning. It was not altogether news that he had told me. I had seen him burning his youthful wings in the white flame of Miss Palm's beauty, and had been quite well aware he would suffer. He is a tender hearted little chap, and very excellent company; but he is not the romantic figure that might hope to stand beside Miss Palm. I'm not that, either, but at least I'm tall enough, and I'm not fat. It has always seemed to me a great misfortune that a man should be fat and romantic.

"Are you going to take the 2 o'clock train?" I asked.

He stared at me.

"Am I?" he cried. "And she up there in that wreck! Man, I'd walk it!"

At this moment the train was backed in, and we got aboard. We had only ten minutes to wait before the start, and yet it seemed an age. I spent some of the time debating whether I should tell Jack Manning about the telegram I had received. He might like to know that Dr. S. K. Adams was hopeful of Muriel, but, on the other hand, the incident of the little book would grieve him. Besides, it was to me a sacred thing. I could not bring myself to mention it.

As the train pulled out, Jack and I went forward into the smoking car. Colonel Burbank, Brookfield and the doctor were already there, and with them were two men whom I knew, both very good fellows. They were Chauncey Matthewson, a broker, and young Willard Price. It was at a dancing party in the residence of Price's parents that I had first met Muriel. Except for the men whom I have named, the car was almost empty.

I greeted Matthewson and Price and asked the latter if he was going to Conway.

"Yes," said he. "I have a friend on the wrecked train."

His face, which had been rather pale, suddenly flushed.

"You're not going up there on Miss Palm's account?" I demanded.

"Hush!" he whispered, glancing at Matthewson. "I didn't tell him. He's not the fellow to—to understand my—my feelings at such a time. He makes a confounded joke of everything. We happened to come along down here together. I suppose he's going up to his country place in Annandale. His mother is still up there. But I'll tell you, I had a telegram informing me that Miss Palm was hurt. Isn't it awful?"

"A telegram?" said I.

He took it out of his pocket, turning his back to the others as he did so.

"Read it," said he, and I read as follows:

Miss Palm injured in collision here. We hope not seriously.

DR. S. K. ADAMS.

"How did Dr. Adams get your address?" I demanded.

Price blushed. "Why, you see, I was lunching with Muriel today"— he began.

"You were?" said I.

"Yes," he replied. "I went over to her uncle's house about noon, and she was just going downtown, so I went along, and we ran in somewhere for a bite of lunch. I happened to see an account of a railroad accident in the paper, and it made me nervous, knowing that she was going away so soon. She is such a dainty creature—like a cup of tinted crystal! It didn't seem right to let her meet the risks of this world. Did you ever feel that way about anybody?"

"Yes," I admitted, "I've felt that way."

"Well," he said, with a sigh, "the long and short of it is that I persuaded her to put my name and address in a little book with just the word 'notify' over it. I've done the same thing fifty times before, but nothing ever happened. It shows a personal interest—sort of flatters a girl—well, not that exactly, but it gives her a chance to flatter you. Muriel seemed to regard it as quite startling and—and interesting. You understand?"

"Yes," said I. "I can see that the idea may have appealed to her."

Price shuddered and put his hand to his forehead. "To think that this should have happened!" he said. "I feel as if I'd tampered with fate. And yet I thank heaven that the name was there and that I am permitted to be here upon my way to help her."

A sudden and unreasonable anger seized me. I turned hastily and encountered the steady gaze of Colonel Burbank.

"Colonel," said I upon an inspiration, "were you summoned by telegraph—if it's a fair question?"

"Yes sir; I was," said the colonel, slightly inflating his chest.

Matthewson, the broker, had come up behind me, and he leaned over the back of a seat, his shock of iron gray hair falling forward upon his brow.

"Not from Dr. S. K. Adams?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir," responded the colonel, taking another inch of chest measure. "The message was from Dr. Adams."

Matthewson's form suddenly relaxed. He thrust a hand into the breast pocket of his coat, drew forth a telegram and held it out toward Burbank.

"I received this," said he, "and it explains my presence here."

The colonel adjusted his eyeglasses, held them poised for a moment and then removed them with a steady hand. His glance slowly swept the group. Every man of us except Dr. Deering held a telegram. Even I, who should by this time have been prepared for anything, was amazed to see the yellow slip of paper fluttering in little Jack Manning's trembling hand.

"Gentlemen," said the colonel, "this is certainly extraordinary, and there are men who might think it humorous"—

He glanced fiercely at Matthewson, who was a relentless jester, but there was no need of a reproof. Matthewson looked as if he were reading the burial service.

"What I was about to say," continued the colonel, "is this: In a moment of great need—how great we do not yet know—it happened that Miss Palm had with her the addresses of certain gentlemen whom she had seen fit to honor in this way. All the help that we can give her will not be too much; all possible respect will be less than her due."

Matthewson reached across the back of the chair and grasped the colonel's hand. In eighteen years that I have known Chauncey Matthewson that is the only time I ever saw him really serious.

"Miss Palm and I lunched together today," he began.

"Lunched?" said I.

He regarded me severely.

"Certainly," said he. "I met her shopping, and as it was her last day in town I ventured to claim a few minutes of her society. So we had some cake and ices at Collier's. It was while there that she mentioned the matter of—of railroad accidents, and—and I think I need not explain further."

He glanced around with a frown as if he thought that somebody would laugh.

"I met Miss Palm," said the colonel, "just by Taylor's—the florist's—and she consented to accept a few flowers from an old fellow who admired her heartily, and to whom the sight of her beauty was part of the good in the world. I expressed some anxiety because she was to travel alone, and"—

There was a dead silence, broken at last by Jack Manning's sharp and high voice.

"I called at her uncle's house," said he, "about 5 o'clock."

Brookfield and I exchanged glances. It was either his turn or mine.

"I asked Miss Palm to lunch with me at the Continental," said I. "She hadn't much appetite"—

The colonel checked me with a glare of his eyes.

"I was at the station," said Brookfield simply, and as we all knew that Muriel's uncle was there, and that Brookfield must have known it in advance, we silently bowed in deference to his courage.

"You were the only sensible man among us," said Matthewson. "You knew what to do."

And he bowed to Dr. Deering. This brought the doctor into prominence, and he felt the need of saying something.

"I suppose you all responded to the telegram," said he.

It appears that every one of us had wired some form of the expression, "Will come by the 2 o'clock train."

"Dr. Adams will feel justified in making extraordinary exertions," said Dr. Deering. "I think we may hope for excellent results. Nothing more definite can be said until we hear something in regard to the nature of the injuries."

Nobody spoke in response to this. Nobody had the heart. The silence became dreadful, unbearable.

"I asked for an answer at Annandale," said the colonel, and it appeared that four out of five of us had done the same.

The train seemed to creep, but it crept into Annandale at last. Four telegrams awaited us there. Mine read thus:

I'm really not hurt a bit. Not necessary to come. Thank you so much. M. P.

The same idea was in all, but Muriel was not the girl to make them read just alike. In most respects I think mine was equal to the average, though I happened to discover that Willard Price's was signed "Muriel." However, Price had known her since she was a child.

Colonel Burbank's eyes were moist after he had read his telegram. "Splendid pluck, splended pluck that little girl has!" he said. "I tell you I've seen brave men who couldn't write such a cheery message as that in the midst of their pain, though they tried hard enough, poor fellows. But a woman, the right kind of a woman, beats them all!"

He folded the telegram reverently and put it into his inner waistcoat pocket. We others were much depressed. We had taken Muriel's words for their face value, and our hearts had been uplifted. I confessed my own foolishness openly and took shame to myself for having failed to see through a deception so palpable and at the same time so noble.

"It was over my head at first," the colonel admitted, "but of course there can't be any doubt when one thinks of the matter seriously. It's her unselfishness. We shall find the poor child hard hurt, I'm afraid."

"Ah, here he is!"

We had no more news between Annandale and Conway, though we made various attempts to get some. The night seemed interminable, and the dawn was the slowest since the evening and the morning were the first day.

It was 7 o'clock when we reached Conway, which is a V shaped town driven into the hills, as if it were the head of a spear, by the narrow bay, which is the spear's haft. A cold mist was wedged in above Conway, and in the coldest part of it the train set us down upon a desolate platform.

Colonel Burbank put on the military expression which means, "I have seen worse, and I didn't weaken;" Brookfield pulled down his golf cap and drew his opera cloak across his breast, and Jack Manning's teeth sounded like marbles shaken in a bowl as he stepped out into the frozen air.

Upon the platform stood a tall, high shouldered young man wearing a soft hat with a queer straight brim, which was pulled down to the level of his eyebrows. He was smooth shaved, and his lower jaw somewhat overlapped the upper, the corners of his mouth being sharply uplifted. This peculiarity gave him a perpetual sardonic smile. As we began to get down from the train he advanced toward us.

"Colonel Burbank," said he, easily guessing to whom the title belonged—"Colonel Burbank and gentlemen, I am Dr. Adams. Let me see, are you all here?"

I saw the fingers of his left hand move as if he were counting.

"D-d-d-doctor," chattered Jack Manning, "speak out. Don't keep us waiting."

"Miss Palm is doing nicely," said the doctor, in a smooth, precise tone like a schoolmaster's. "I think she will be able to see you when she has finished her breakfast. Now, if you will step this way"—

He led us through the station building, and we found a queer looking coach upon the other side. We climbed in by request and Dr. Adams took a place beside the driver, so that we had no chance to question him. After a drive so short as to prove the coach a wholly unnecessary luxury, we drew up before a country tavern, into the parlor of which Dr. Adams gravely ushered us. A moment later Muriel entered, from what seemed to be the dining room. She paused a moment in the doorway and surveyed the group.

"Now isn't this perfectly lovely of you all!" she exclaimed. "I'm sure that nobody ever had such friends before. And to think that I don't need you a bit! Isn't it dreadful? I'm absolutely ashamed."

By this time she was shaking hands with us.

"But I couldn't help it in the least; really I couldn't," she continued. "Dr. Adams will tell you that I was totally unconscious when they took me out of the car, and for more than an hour afterward. It was fright, simple fright, though the doctor says that I

LIVER COMPLAINT.

"Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills Cure All Liver Ills." Easy to Take. Always Effectual. They Cure in Nature's Way.

A celebrated English authority once said, "The liver is the direct cause of nine-tenths of the ills that flesh is heir to." It is the largest gland in the body, and naturally has a great deal of work to do, for the reason that through its cells and tissues the blood must pass many times every hour. Now suppose its functions should become impaired or interfered with. You know you would have pains or uneasiness in the right side, or a dull aching under the shoulder blade. The complexion would become sallow or yellowish, your appetite would be impaired, your bowels inactive, while headaches, dizziness and bad feelings would be your daily experience. In these cases relief that is speedy and full is always afforded by the use of Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills, which are a marvelous success in curing all forms of liver complaint, including biliousness and jaundice. Taken as directed they always restore an inactive and torpid liver to healthy action, regulate the bowels and cleanse the blood of impurities. A week's use of Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills by a bilious or constipated person will elevate the spirits and again make life really worth living. They are invaluable for all stomach and bowel troubles, and they always cure sick headache, constipation and biliousness in one night. 25 cents at all dealers.

It is 30 years, says the London Post, since Germany began to build up a colonial empire, and the net result is that after spending fifteen or twenty millions sterling, she has secured more than 1,000,000 square miles of territory, with a sparsely scattered German population of between 2,000 and 3,000 souls—men, women and children. Gov. Adams Seated in Colorado.

In declaring that Alva Adams was elected governor of Colorado the Legislature of that State has taken action which will certainly be commended This result was brought about by the refusal of a considerable number of Republican members of the body to agree to the high-handed proceedings of which it was proposed to retain Governor Peabody in office, when he had been clearly defeated at the election. Their attitude forced the other Republican members to a compromise, which involved the seating of Adams, thereby placing the necessity of making a contest upon Governor Peabody, where it properly belongs. The action of the anti-Peabody Republicans was not altogether influenced by the evident injustice of the proposal to count out Mr. Adams. They were desirous of seeing Governor Peabody retired, and also of securing one of the two judges to be appointed to the supreme court of the State. Both these objects they seem to have attained, although Governor Peabody made for awhile bitter opposition to the plan by which he has been sidetracked.

Twenty-seven votes are necessary to the election of a United States senator in the Delaware legislature, if there are no absentees. Addicks has only twenty-two, and it is commonly reported that he cannot hold his forces together if the deadlock continues more than two weeks. There seems to be a chance at last to shatter the political power of this arch-corruptionist. Decency in Delaware has made a gallant fight against debauchery. May the victory this time be decisive.

That is a shrewd move of the Japanese in declaring that Port Arthur and Dalney will be made free ports for the commerce of the world, subject only to such restrictions as the state of war necessitates. It is intended to be an indication of the policy which will be pursued in Manchuria should it remain under Japanese domination and is well calculated to conciliate the favor of neutral nations whose subjects have trade relations with the province. It was feared, with apparently good reason, that Russia proposed to monopolize the commerce and trade of Manchuria, and this was one of the causes of the war between her and Japan.

Besieged by Arabs.

Constantinople, Jan. 9.—Reinforcements have been sent from Hodieda and Damascus to the relief of the garrison of Sanaa, capital city of Yemen, Aarabia, 110 miles from Hodieda, and having a population of 40,000, which has been beleaguered for several weeks by Arab tribes. Official circles are confident that the garrison can hold out until the arrival of succor.

Stoessel's Return.

Sanitation in Barber Shops.

While much of the popular apprehension regarding the ubiquity of the microbe is not justified by fact, there is one place at least in which, as the London Lancet points out, eternal vigilance is the price of safety. That place is the barber shop.

The hands of the barber and the utensils which he employs necessarily come into very intimate contact with the scalps and faces of the persons upon whom he operates, and should the germs of disease be present it is evident that the danger of their transmission is very great indeed. Nothing is harder to disinfect than a hairbrush. At present few dermatologists doubt the bacterial origin of scalp diseases, and their prevalence, the Lancet believes, may be traced directly to infected brushes in barber shops.

The Lancet notes that, although nothing has been done by any public authority in Great Britain to regulate the barber's trade, the state of New York has attempted, with considerable success, to render the tonsorial parlor more sanitary and makes these suggestions:

If every customer could have his own brushes, his own razors, his own towels and his own soap there could be no infection from one customer to another, and the only danger to be avoided would be the transference of disease from the barber himself. This exclusive use of the instruments employed is almost a counsel of perfection and is rarely attainable, but much less will serve to minimize the risk. In the first place it is essential that the hands, at least, of the hairdresser should be free from disease. Between every two customers the hairdresser should wash his hands and thus remove much of the risk of carrying infection.

Fresh towels for each patron and the careful disinfection between customers of razors and other paraphernalia are equally important with cleanliness in the person and garments of the barber himself. The head during the operation of shaving may be rested upon a clean piece of paper if the cost of towels is objected to. Brushes are, as the Lancet confesses, difficult to disinfect, but they may be made comparatively innocuous by ordinary washing in soap and water, while the use of formalin should effectually destroy the hardiest germ. Razors may be thoroughly cleansed by boiling. The contention that this process injures the edge is denied by so high an authority as the hygienic council of the Seine. Combs, which should be of metal, and scissors may be easily disinfected in boiling water. In conclusion the Lancet says:

The use of a stick of alum should be prohibited, for it certainly becomes stained with blood and may easily spread disease. Powder puffs should be replaced by pieces of cotton wool, which can be burned after use. Lastly we put a most important regulation—no one suffering from any obvious disease of the scalp or face should be served in a public hairdresser's shop.

Modern Religious Toleration.

The calm manner in which the change of faith of the American marquise who founded the Roman Catholic university in Washington has been received both by the public at large and by the church particularly affected is one more reminder of the great change which has come over the religious world within the past few years. One can readily imagine the heat which such an act would have generated less than a half century ago. Only recall the excitement over Cardinal Wiseman's alleged "apostasy." At that epoch the ethics of religious conversion were a burning political issue, and society flew violently asunder over points of doctrine which would now provoke only a smile. A president may be congratulated by a pope and even deliver the chief address at a Roman Catholic celebration without being in danger of exclusion from the Protestant communion, while a conspicuous churchwoman may put away her faith with confidence that only her own soul is concerned in the change.

Julius G. Lay, consul general of the United States at Barcelona, reports to the state department, as having a bearing upon our trade relations with Cuba, the presentation to the Spanish government by Cuban planters and manufacturers of a petition urging the necessity of tariff concessions in favor of Cuban tobacco. The petitioner, Mr. Lay says, explains that no other product can better be offered to Spain in exchange for her oils, wines, cotton textures, shoes and many other goods imported annually into Cuba, which during the last fiscal year aggregated a value of $10,623,312, or 18 per cent of the imports from all countries. During the twelve months ended June 30, 1903, Spain imported $1,681,624 worth of Cuban produce, or 2 per cent of the total exports from Cuba, of which amount no less than $982,245 is credited to tobacco.

The Cuban army of liberation, so called, is clamoring for reward, and the sum of $57,000,000 will be needed to pay off the claims already approved. Where the cash is to come from is a problem with which President Palma will have to wrestle. This army has been heard from before, but not in a way which would seem to call for financial sacrifices on the part of the new and struggling republic to meet its demands.

An army colonel has been reprimanded for not marrying a certain lady to whom he was engaged, but he has probably escaped many reprimands of the curtain variety.

HALT NAVY BILL

CONGRESS AGAINST BIG APPROPRIATION FOR NAVY.

Breach Between Roosevelt and House —Speaker Tells President of Majority's Views.

Washington, Jan. 9.—An irreconcilable controversy between the President and congress, or, more properly, the house of representatives, seems to be impending over the forthcoming naval appropriation bill.

The President is insistent on his plans for a big navy—for battleships and cruisers in such numbers as to show to the world that the American navy will be the greatest afloat.

The President a few days ago gave forcible expression of his views to Speaker Cannon. He said in effect that the estimates of the department ought to be incorporated into law by congress.

The speaker replied that while a majority of the leaders of congress shared the President's views concerning the advisability of upbuilding the navy he was forced to believe that the house of representatives would not pass a bill of the dimensions suggested by the navy department.

He told the President, in other words, that he feared that the house would not support the administration. Other Republican representatives of influence have told the President the same thing. They have expressed the belief that the house will insist upon paring the naval appropriation bill by a process of elimination, which will include contracts for new battleships and cruisers, until the total has been reduced to less than $100,000,000.

The department's estimates call for $115,000,000.

The house committee on naval affairs, or at least a majority of that body, favors the larger appropriation.

Chairman Foss has made up his mind to support the President. A number of his colleagues on the committee, on the other hand, will yield to the sentiment of the house and demand retrenchment in naval expenditures. These gentlemen are just as much in earnest as the president's supporters and the spectacle of a minority report upon a general appropriation bill, protesting against its alleged extravagances, is likely to be witnessed after the committee is ready to report to the house.

How far the President's influence will operate to persuade the house of representatives to accept the administration's naval programme can only be conjectured, but, on the surface of affairs, it would appear that a substantial majority of the house is now opposed to the administration.

STATEHOOD BILL

Will Be Principal Topic of Discussion In Senate During the Present Week.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The joint statehood measure will continue to be the principal topic of discussion in the United States senate during the present week, but other measures will receive attention each day during the morning hour, including the omnibus claims bill, for which Senator Warren stands sponsor. The bill comprises more than 200 pages, but the senator already has succeeded in having it read by utilizing odd hours, and thus has put a large and important part of the work of consideration to the rear. There will be an effort made to get through the bill providing for the compensation of American fishermen whose vessels were seized previous to the arbitration of 1893. This measure is in the hands of Senator Fulton, who will press it as an act of justice to men who he thinks have been discriminated against.

WARNING IGNORED

New York Saloons Did Business on Sunday—A Number of Arrests Made By Police.

New York, Jan. 9.—Despite action of the police in warning the saloon keepers of the city that the Sunday closing law must be observed, the Raines law hotels did business as usual throughout the day and saloons were also open. The only noticeable difference was that the outposts at the side entrances to the saloons were doubled, and more care was exercised in admitting customers. The police made but few more than the usual number of Sunday arrests for violation of the excise law, and many of the prisoners were discharged after arraignment in the police courts. When District Attorney Jerome was asked why the police warnings had not been heeded he said: "I am not policing the city of New York; besides, I did not say this would be a 'dry' Sunday."

BIG SIDE HUNT

Forty-eight Young Men Engaged In a Hunt In Mary Ann Township —Oyster Supper.

A big side hunt between twenty-four picked men on a side, was one of the lively events that has taken place in Mary Ann township during the past two weeks. By the terms of the hunt, the losing side at the end of the hunt was to set up a big oyster supper. During the past two weeks the firing of shotguns in the vicinity of Wilkins sounded as if a Fourth of July celebration was had. The respective sides were captained by Charles C. Roe and J. W. Swisher, and when the count was made on Saturday night it was found that Roe's men had credited to them 63,730 points and Swisher's men 31,650 points. It was found that 374 rats had been killed, 568 mice, 1,526 sparrows, 3 owls, 1 crow, 15 hawks, and 19 moles. Mice counted 5, sparrows 25, rats 100, hawks 500, owls 500, and crows 500. The losing side will set up the supper at the township hall on Thursday night, January 12. Everybody is invited to attend the oyster supper.

INCENDIARY FIRE

Oil Tanks Destroyed In Russian Field, Where a Big Strike Is Now On.

Baku, Jan. 9.—A big fire, presumably of incendiary origin, destroyed 16 tanks on the Nobel company's and several adjoining properties. There has been no actual fighting since Jan. 5, when a collision occurred between strikers and Cossacks, and six workmen were killed and two Cossacks and 30 workmen injured. The strike has been in progress since Dec. 23. The original dispute was over hours and wages. The first few days of the strike there was no trouble, but Dec. 29 crowds threatened the guards stationed about the refining works and Cossacks were called out. Many persons were injured in desultory fighting between strikers and soldiers at various points.

CLAY LICK.

Messrs. Clarence V. Fleming and Will Hughes are in Texas for a few weeks.

Mr. Earl Fulton of near Newark is here visiting his many friends.

The Madison township board of education convened Monday for the purpose of organizing. The board is composed of the following gentlemen: Joseph Butler, C. V. Fleming, J. T. Osborne, Jos. Watson and E. Patterson, in whose charge our schools will be safe.

Mr. Robert Cartnal and sister, Miss Dottie, attended preeting at Mt. Carmel Saturday night.

Mr. and Mrs. John Thompson entertained the following on Sunday at dinner: Mr. and Mrs. John Bradley, Miss Hattie Thompson and Messrs. Mac Mossman and Earl Fulton.

There is a decided sentiment favorable to the heating of the electric line depot at this point.

A protracted meeting at Mt. Carmel, a few miles south of town, is in progress.

One of the most delightful parties yet given here during the present winter was the one at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Prumm. Taffy pulling plays, and music were the evening's diversions and were much enjoyed by the following young people: Misses Hattie Thompson, Mame Bageant, Hattie Kennedy, Blanche Miller, Cassie Bageant, Messrs. Jesse Miller, John Bageant, Albert Simpson, Mac Mossman, and Sam Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Flowers.

Sentence of six months' imprisonment has been passed at Benton, Saxony on a young servant girl who had been discharged by the general director of the offices of the local railroad.

ROLLING MILL

BOUGHT BY NEWARK MAN, MAY BE REOPENED.

Posibility That the Old Zanesville Plant May Be Started at Least Part.

Zanesville, Jan. 9. There is still a possibility that the old mill in Zanesville may be started at least in part. When Mr. Shonberg of Newark, purchased the mill at the commissioner's sale there was some talk of resumption, but all hopes of the mill being started were given up when the announcement was made sometime ago that Simon Linser had purchased the real estate and that he would erect on the site a large brewery.

While this plan has not been abandoned by Mr. Linser there are chances that the brewery will not be built, but that the mill will reopen. For three or four days there have been vague rumors current among the former employes of the mill that it would start at once.

Mr. Linser was asked in regard to these rumors and he stated that while the idea of building the brewery had not been wholly abandoned, he had been approached by men interested in the iron business who want a lease on the ground in order to start what is known as the new mill of the Zanesville Iron company's plant. He did not state who these men were and said that he did not know whom they represented. Nothing definite has yet been done about the matter, and the deal for the lease may be made in the near future.

IRRITATION

of the throat, sore and swollen tonsils, loss of voice, and other throat troubles should never be neglected. These ailments quickly work down to the lungs, and often end in consumption or pneumonia. Hamlins Wizard Oil used as a gargle, and externally on the throat, is a marvelous remedy for these painful and dangerous disorders, and effects relief and cure after everything else has failed.

Says Henry Wade, of Harlin, Mo: "I am under obligations to you for the great good which Hamlins Wizard Oil did my wife. She suffered from throat trouble for a year, and though she doctored and doctored, nothing did her any good, until she tried Hamlins Wizard Oil." Price 50c and $1.00.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Best Made.

"In my opinion Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best made for colds," says Mrs. Cora Walker, of Porterville California. There is no doubt about its being the best. No other is so sure a preventive of pneumonia. No other is so pleasant and safe to take. These are good reasons why it should be preferred to any other. The fact is that few people are satisfied with any other after having once used this remedy. For sale by all druggists.

AMUSEMENTS

Englander and Smith's "The Strollers," adapted from the German of Krem and Lindau, will be presented by Nixon & Zimmerman at the Auditorium tomorrow night, with a competent cast and the environment of good scenery and effects. The story of "The Strollers" revolves around two characters, a gypsy and a montebank, who have joined forces to tour the country and give entertainments and feats of legerdermain and jugglery at country fairs and resorts. During their peregrinations they happen to find a diamond necklace and a one thousand mark note, which has been dropped by a certain prince who is consorting with a ballad dancer from the Royal Viennese Court, and this piece of apparent good fortune proves their undoing. They are incarcerated in the county jail until the prince comes up with them, but they succeed in passing themselves off as royal personages, and having the prince incarcerated in their stead, they start on a tour of the different resorts with the prince, and a force of detectives on their trail. They have rather a checkered time of it, but they finally make a deal with the prince to get back the diamond necklace, which had been entrusted to the prince by his royal master, the emperor and finally succeed in getting back the jewels are thereby reinstating themselves in favor of the officials, who offer them lucurative positions in court. This is accomplished in the last act a the Fete of Fans, where all appear disguised. Seats are now selling.

THE JAILOR IN "THE STROLLERS"

DAN SULLY IN "OUR PASTOR."

One of the most promising of the coming attractions at the Auditorium, is Daniel Sully's new play, "Our Pastor," in which the distinguished actor and comedian is winning the greatest success of a long and brilliant career. "Our Pastor" is a comedy drama in three acts by Jerrold Shepard, a rising young author, and for dramatic force, richness of comedy cleverness of construction and general excellence is by far the best play Mr. Sully has ever produced.

"A MESSAGE FROM MARS."

A rare dramatic treat is promised at the Auditorium early in February, when Charles Hawtrey will present his wonderfully successful comedy, "A Message From Mars," which has had such remarkably long runs in London and New York. It deals with daily life and supernatural elements, seen [illegible], and the combination has all the force and attractiveness of novelty. Mr. Hawtrey has been universally praised as the best comedian England has [illegible] many years. When [illegible] years ago at the Garrick [illegible] New York, "A Message From Mars" ran the entire season—a [illegible] equaled by any foreign star. Since then it has been twice revived for long runs, the latest having [illegible] season at the Princess Theatre.

"JUNGLE IMPS" COMING.

[illegible] the Auditorium announce [illegible] booked the "Jungle Imps" [illegible] organization [illegible] the City of Cincinnati [illegible]. Their appearance [illegible] the latter part of the present month. Their street parade [illegible] to be the [illegible] features of [illegible] organization.

AT THE GREAT SOUTHERN.

Patrons of the Great Southern [illegible] Columbus, have had presented [illegible] [illegible] January [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] who [illegible] [illegible] there be [illegible] a [illegible] brilliant American girl deserves her present secure position, that lady is—what we must now call her, Miss Cecelia Loftus. From the vaudeville stage, where she made a reputation as mimic that has never been rivaled to leading woman for several of the greatest of contemporary actors and actresses and, finally, to being starred in a play written for her by the most scholarly and brilliant playwright of his generation—is no small step. In fact it means many, many weary steps up through all the drugery. The piece used by Miss Loftus was written for her by Mr. Israel Zangwell or rather he dramatized one of his little masterpieces of comedy and character drawing but the original character could not have been designed for anyone else than Miss Loftus. It is the character of a delicious Irish girl Eileen O'Keefe, who is employed as a governess in a wealthy family durng the daytime, but to pay her profilgate father's debts is appearing under the name of Nelly O'Neil, on a music hall stage at nights, and as such becomes the rage of London, and is made love to by many men. Her double life brings many ludicrous complications all of which she accepts with wholesome Irish philosophy, good to see. The piece gives Miss Loftus opportunity to incidentally introduce, with all her old time power, imitations of famous actresses.

On Friday and Saturday nights, "The Cingalee," a musical comedy, presented by the Augustus Daly Musical company, with a company of one hundred people, including William Norris, who, in this production, has made the greatest success of his remarkably varied career, in nthe part of "Chambhuddy Ram," a Baboo lawyer. The librettist has produced a book absolutely unhackneyed by selecting the island of Ceylon as the scene of action, and scenic effects of unprecedented beauty have been evolved from this Oriental setting. The music has been pronounced far above the class of music written for the average musical comedy and the most conservative critics of London, New York and Chicago (the only cities in which the production has appeared up to this time), have had nothing but praise for score and incidental selections.

CATHOLIC CLUB ENTERTAINMENT.

Special notice was given in Saturday's Advocate of those who took the leading parts in Mr. Garrity's entertainment at Taylor hall. In addition to those prominently mentioned, special recognition should be made of Miss Anna Riegger's playing as "Lady Anne." She made a very beautiful appearance in her handsome costume and her rendition of the part proved her to be an actress with talent very rarely found in one so young. Miss Reigger is also a fine pianist of exceptional ability and accompanied Mr. Fred Reigger, her brother, in "Hearts and Flowers," which rendition by that capable young violinist was one of the most pleasing number of the program.

Mr. Anthony Stare was quite good as an elocutionist. His rendition of "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," one of Riley's beautiful poems, was on the whole good. "Cyclone Galop," piano duet, by Misses Alma Mueller and Veronia Stare, was well rendered and well applauded. Mr. H. Gundlach is also a "comer" as an actor.

The music by the string quintet proved very entertaining, but should have been played during the long waits between the scenes.

The young people are to be congratulated on their first appearance and should continue in their efforts and try to improve, for it is only by persistent trying that success will be won.

UNHAPPINESS DISPELLED.

Men and Women Unanimous About It.

Many women weep and wail and refuse to be comforted because their once magnificent tresses have become thin and faded. Many men incline to profanity because the flies bite through the thin thatch on their craniums. It will be good news to the miserable of both sexes, to learn that Newbro's Herpicide has been placed upon the market. This is the new scalp germicide and antiseptic that acts by destroying the germ or microbe that is the underlying cause of all hair destruction. Herpicide is a new preparation, made after a new formula on an entirely new principle. Anyone who has tried it will testify as to its worth. Try it yourself and be convinced. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

Figures published by the Tea Traders' association of London for the five months ending October 31, last year, show a diminution in the consumption of tea in the British Isles to the extent of 4,000,000 pounds as compared with the corresponding time in 1903, an indication of dire poverty.

RAILWAY RUMBLES

R. M. WALLACE PROMOTED BY THE ERIE COMPANY.

Mammoth Engine In B. & O. Service—Paragraphs of Local and General Interest.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 9.—The announcement is made that R. H. Wallace, formerly assistant passenger agent of the Erie railroad, with headquarters in this city, has been appointed general passenger agent of the same road, with headquarters in New York. J. D. Brown, former city ticket agent here of the same road, has been appointed assistant general passenger agent, with headquarters in this city. Mr. Wallace takes the place of D. W. Cooke, who has been promoted to assistant general traffic manager of both the passenger and freight business.

A Mammoth Locomotive.

The new articulated compound freight locomotive of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which is the only one of the Mallet type in the country, and by far the largest in the world, was first placed in active service, January 5 helping freight trains over the grade from Sand Patch to Rockwood, on the Connellsville division, a distance of 16 miles.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad had this powerful locomotive built at the Schenectady, N. Y., works of the American Locomotive company, and as soon as completed it was placed with the road's exhibit at the St. Louis exposition. The latter part of December it was dismantled, taken to the company's shops at Cumberland, and put in order for use on the road. An official test run was made between Cumberland and Hyndman, 14 miles Wednesday afternoon, January 4, which was successful. Sand Patch is 33 miles west of Cumberland, and from there to Rockwood the grade ranges from 1.3 to nearly 2 per cent. The heaviest grade is at the rate of about 1,000 feet to the miles. The locomotive was secured for use in "pusher service" to help frieght trains over Sand Patch hill, on the Allegheny mountains.

It is, in fact, a pair of locomotives with one boiler. The engine, in working order, weighs 334,500 pounds, and the weight of the tender filled with 7,000 gallons of water, and 13 tons of coal, is 143,000 pounds. It has the greatest heating surface ever put into a locomotive—5,586 square feet, of which 219.4 square feet are in the fire box and 5,366.3 square feet in the tubes, which are 21 feet long. These proportions outdo anything of the kind designed for a locomotive. The immense power of the locomotive may be checked in the drawbar pull of 70,000 pounds, which it can exert working compound, or 80,000 pounds in simple gear. The boiler will carry a working pressure of 235 pounds.

THE COLLISION ON THE D. F. & J.

was hit on top of the head; and it is a little bit sore"— She touched her golden and glorious crown with a dainty hand. "You see I had lain down in my berth fully dressed, for I was to get home by half past four, and I do hate to go to bed in a car. Well, there I lay asleep and suddenly there was a terrible bumping, and I woke up. Like a lightning flash it came into my mind: 'This is an accident. I shall be killed and all those ridiculous telegrams will be sent. Oh, why was I so foolish!' And with that thought I simply fainted dead away and knew nothing more until I was lying on that couch in this parlor. I asked immediately what had been done about the telegrams. Didn't I, Dr. Adams?"

"What you said, as I remember it," responded the doctor in his most precise tone was, 'Have you telegraphed Pat?'"

A faint, strange murmur ran through our group. We had all heard of Pat.

"Yes; wasn't that queer?" continued Miss Palm. "I thought of Cousin Pat the very first thing. He's here too. Isn't that nice? You can all meet him."

"We shall be delighted, honored," said the colonel.

"He's been here only a few minutes," said Miss Palm. "He's finishing his breakfast. We're going home by boat across the lake, for I really don't dare to get into a train again so soon. And I'm afraid we'll have to start right away. Isn't that too bad? Ah, here he is!"

A tall, slender and graceful young man entered the room at this moment. He was immaculate in dress, and he was very good looking—confound him! —with the eyes that win a woman and the slow, soft, deep and earnest voice that should always go with those eyes. There was a faint suggestion of the Irish born, English bred gentleman about him to match his name, a suggestion, let us say, that his grandfather was probably such a man.

Embarrassed? Not in the slightest degree. Nothing in this world will ever embarrass Pat. He has the smooth assurance of a polished brass cannon. He faced that delegation from Dan Cupid's private idiot asylum as if there were nothing at all unusual about it, and it was through no fault of his courtesy that I felt as if I were going down in a quick elevator.

"Your carriage is at the door," said Dr. Adams, breaking in at the right moment, with mechanical exactitude.

We all filed out upon the veranda like jackies manning the side.

"Goodby," said Muriel, taking Price's hand. "Remember that this is all your fault. You began it, and then—it seemed to please you all so much. Goodby, Mr. Manning. I do hope you won't take cold. Goodby"—this to me—"I shall always remember that delightful luncheon at the club; and to think that I'd had two already. Isn't that preposterous? And poor Mr. Brookfield, who has come all this distance in his dress clothes. How perfectly funny! But I can never be grateful enough. Goodby, Colonel Burbank. Wasn't it dreadful? I lost those lovely roses in the wreck. I could cry when I think of it. Really, Pat, we must hurry. And I'm so proud, so proud to see you all here. Goodby, goodby!"

She was waving her hand to us as the carriage moved away, and beside her was Pat, his head bared, his manner placidly correct, his expression telling of a gentle, well bred regret that he must leave so many new acquaintances, so many pleasant gentlemen, after so small an opportunity for enjoying their society.

Behind me I could hear Dr. Deering talking with his professional brother, Dr. Adams.

"Were many persons injured in the wreck?" he asked.

"No one was seriously hurt," replied Dr. Adams.

"Well, I don't know," said Matthewson in my ear. "It was a mighty bad collision on the D. F. and J. when we five fellows came together. And when we collided with Cousin Pat"—

"It was fatal," said I solemnly.

"Gentlemen"—It was the smooth and smiling Dr. Adams speaking from the doorway—"you will have just time for breakfast before the next train home."

I looked at him for five seconds and then shook my head. It was my duty to strangle him, but I hadn't the heart for it.

MALARIA IN THE SYSTEM

Holly Springs, Miss., March 24, 1903. While building railroads in Tennessee some twelve years ago a number of hands contracted fever and various forms of blood and skin diseases. I carried S. S. S. in my commissary and gave it to my hands with most gratifying results. I can recommend S. S. S. as the finest preparation for Malaria, chills and fever, as well as all blood and skin diseases. W. I. McGOWAN

I suffered greatly from Boils, which would break out on different parts of my body. I saw S. S. S. advertised and after using about three bottles I was cured, and for the last three years have had no trouble whatever. A. W. ZEBER. 217 Read St., Evansville, Ind.

I began using your S. S. S. probably ten years ago for Malaria and blood troubles, and it proved so good that I have continued ever since using it as a family remedy. It is a pleasure for me to recommend S. S. S. for the benefit of others who are needing a first rate blood purifier, tonic and cure for Malaria. Arkansas City, Ark. C. C. HEMINGWAY.

Boils, abscesses, sores, dark or yellow splotches and debility are some of the symptoms of this miserable disease. S. S. S. counteracts and removes from the blood all impurities and poisons and builds up the entire system. It is guaranteed a purely vegetable remedy. Write for medical advice or any special information about case.

Something to Look Forward To.

It was generally understood that Peltiah Johnson was a "trifle close," says an exchange, but people did not know the real meaning of that phrase until an acquaintance of Peltiah told the story of his Christmas gift to his daughter.

He and his wife hadn't made their daughter Abigail any Christmas present for a number of years after she was married, and Mrs. Johnson couldn't stand it any longer. She begged Peltiah to get something, but the most she could prevail upon him to buy was a white cup and saucer.

It was not much of a cup and saucer, but Mrs. Johnson put it up and sent it over to Abigail's by Peltiah himself. He got home about 10 o'clock, and his wife helped him off with his overcoat. There was something in one of the inside pockets that stuck out a little, and she said:

"What's this, Peltiah?"

Peltiah chuckled a little. Said he: "That's the sasser."

"Sasser!" Mrs. Johnson cried out. "You don't mean to say that you've brought that sasser of Abigail's back again?"

"That's just what I've done," said he.

"And what for?"

"Waal, the cup's a pretty good present for once, I guess, an' I give 'em to understand they'd git the sasser next year. An' that'll give 'em, ye see, somethin' to look for'ard to during a whole twelvemonth!"

A Feminine Melange

Home Makers and Others. Selfish Christmas Givers

"Funny thing! There seems to be an illusion that all women are home makers," remarked the bachelor as he carefully stroked his mustache.

"Well, if you don't associate woman with the home, what then?" retorted the woman he was talking to.

"Don't get indignant, my dear. It has been the fashion until very recently to idealize women and give them certain attributes whether they possessed them or not. I am simply mentioning the truth. Some women are meant to be home makers, others the very contrary. Under the hands of some women pictures seem to place themselves of their own accord into artistic positions on the wall, the furniture groups itself in a masterly manner, chairs almost invite you to sink into their depths and be comfy, and the very lights are shaded and appealing. A 'homy' woman instinctively knows how to do everything about the house. She puts a touch here, a bit of paint there, and transforms even an attic into a delightful drawing room."

"Oh, of course! Any woman can fix up things nicely if she has the money!"

"Ah, yes, but what I am speaking of is not a question of money. Some of the poorest home makers I know are women who can spend anything they want. And what is the result? Their houses are filled with chilly mahogany pieces, and pictures hung in straight lines on the wall, pictures that mean nothing unless you count the gorgeous frame superior to the subject it incloses. These women could not drape a curtain to save their souls. Bereft of the upholsterer they would let it hang by one hook until he came. They do not even know how to poke up the dead embers of an open fire and draw up a cozy chair invitingly. But it is when this type of woman marries a poor man that she is to be pitied, and the man she marries is still more deserving of a few tears. If she has only three pictures she will put them all on one side of the wall, leaving the others bare. She will go without other pictures because she cannot afford to buy handsome settings for them rather than frame a few prints simply herself and dispose them here and there with taste. She will prefer one silk pillow, even though it be of a soiled, dingy color, to a dozen comfortable ones simply covered with inexpensive cretonne or oriental cotton material. In other words, she has no ingenuity, and her only idea of taste is to put things in her home which are costly or look as if they were."

"If I were a poor man, it seems to me I should hate to marry a woman like that."

And yet there are few men who are aware of these two classes of women.

"People who buy Christmas presents to suit themselves needn't expect any thanks from me," remarked the caustic young woman. "Perhaps you think the adoring young wife is the only one who presents her hubby with a new silk waist for his Christmas present. Not a bit of it. I notice that a good many people buy me just what they admire and think my taste ought to be educated up to it. For instance,

"SHE SENT ME A SET OF BROWNING."

there was Mrs. Beaufogle last Christmas. She sent me a most expensive set of Browning all the way from Boston, when she knows perfectly well that I never read anything deeper than the Sunday papers. I distinctly heard her say once it was a pity such a sensible looking young woman should really be so silly. Well, if she wants to do missionary work let her choose some other time than Christmas. That's all. Then I received a workbasket so cleverly disguised that I had wild hopes it contained bonbons—this from my maiden aunt—as a hint perhaps that I ought to mend my stockings. Last, and not least, that pretty little Mrs. Dainty sent me a perfectly heavenly fancy neck piece; but, ye gods, it was pink, just the shade that goes so perfectly with her own lovely complexion, but when you consider that I have freckles and a sallow skin well!"

MAUD ROBINSON.

The Farmer Man on Housework

I'VE dug out stumps and built stone walls,
I've harrowed and plowed and sown,
I've done all kinds of farm work,
It seems, 't was ever known,
But I've had a new experience,
One that I could not shirk,
For marm has had sciatiky,
And I've been doin' the work.

I've made punkin pies and ginger bread,
Biscuits, rolls and cake;
I've learnd just how to grease a tin
And how long things must bake.
I did not find those things so hard,
If I could just depend
On doin' one thing at a time
And pursuin' it to the end.

But when I peel potatoes,
Mash turnips, season squash
And a dozen other things at once
It stirs me up, by gosh!
It sorter jounces up my thoughts
And leaves me dazed and blinded,
And I s'pose that's why the women
Are so pesky fickle minded.

Our neighbors are the best
That live upon the earth,
And we've had an opportunity
To realize their true worth,
And I surely know their efforts
Have hin holdin' me in check
And kept me from becomin'
Almost a total wreck.

I'm through now, and out of doors
I'm workin' hard and fast,
Tryin' to straighten out my chores
And make up for the past
And when I go to feed the horse
I'm not waterin' cows
Nor choppin' wood nor shovelin' snow
Nor greasin' up my plows.

If sciatiky visits us ag'in,
I hope it's me it'll strike;
Then marm can do the housework,
And I'll groan all I like.
But whether I groan or whether I swear,
You may not care a dime,
But of this you may be certain,
I'll do but one at a time.

Trouble Coming.

"Henry, why don't you buy me a gown like that Mrs. Smith has on?"

"I would, my dear, if I thought you'd look anything like her in it."—San Francisco Examiner.

What It Was.

The constable woke with a horrid start ere he'd finished his dream of pie, for a screech rang out like a soul in pain, with the clanking creak of a rusty chain and a sibilant, soughing sigh. A moan came down on the wings of the wind, with agony in its wake. There were groans that conjured up visions galore of writhing victims in pools of gore and martyrs burned at the stake. "There's a dire deed done!" gasped the valiant slop as he jerked out his truncheon true, and he kicked in the door with a hobnailed boot, while the rats in the hall did a squeaking scoot and the stars blinked a pallid blue. Through a lone keyhole 'scaped a wild, weird cry, a growl like a dog with a bone, but the constable capered and candidly cussed when he found the cause of the row was just—a ninepenny gramophone.—Birmingham (England) Post.

Burke claims that the tickets for the dance were sold under the impression that it was given for his benefit, and that afterward Sheridan, as custodian of the funds, coming from the sale of the tickets refused to turn over the money.

Burke, while an officer, was taken ill with typhoid fever and claims the dance was given for his benefit.

Chief Sheridan, on the other hand, claims that the fund realized was to be used for a general benefit fund for all policemen.

ON B. & O. TRAIN

A RIOT AMONG TOW BOATMEN SUNDAY MORNING.

Terrorized Passengers on Express Train—Conductor Ellis Wired For Police Assistance.

According to Monday's Cincinnati papers there was a big riot on the Baltimore and Ohio express train from Pittsburg Sunday morning, which was in charge of Conductor J. E. Ellis of Newark.

A gang of about twenty coal tow boatmen had boarded the train at Pittsburg to go to Cincinnati, and they took with them their wages, a large jug of whiskey and assortment of weapons. Soon after the train left Pittsburg it became evident that the men intended to make a night of it, for they got out heir whiskey and by midnight all were more or less under the influence and in a quarrelsome mood. Soon after leaving Columbus one of the members of the party accused William Robinson and Robert Ford of the theft of $20 and a terrific fight ensued, in which several heads suffered severely and Conductor Ellis and his crew were obliged to interfere and restore order. Robinson and Ford were chased out of the smoking car and threats were made to throw them off the train if they re-entered. On nearing Cincinnati the two men entered the car again for their valises when a rush was made for them by their infuriated companions. Conductor Ellis and his crew again stood between them and personal violence, and when the train passed Norwood Conductor Ellis sent a request for police assistance, but as the train was passing through the Union depot yards the steamboatmen scrambled off the train, having been warned of the call for the police, and avoided arrest. All escaped except the two men who had been charged with the theft and three others who were stupefied by drink and unable to move. The five men were locked up charged with causing a disturbance on a passenger train. The passengers in the smoking car say that they passed a night of terror, fearing that the two accused men would be murdered on the train by their infuriated companions, as well as fearing violence to the members of the train crew, who attempted to quell the riot.
